Narrative Writing

Write a Journal Entry

Writing in a journal helps you examine and reflect on your experiences. Think about events in your life that affected you positively or negatively. Write a journal entry about one event, including your thoughts about it. Use as many spelling words as you can.

- Use the writing process: prewrite, draft, revise, edit, and publish.
- Include reasons why your subject is important to you.
- Use descriptive words that help the reader visualize where you were and what you did.
- Use complete sentences with correct capitalization, punctuation, grammar, and spelling.
- Read your journal entry. Circle three words that may be misspelled. Use a print or online dictionary to check the spelling.

Transfer

In your Spelling Journal, write words that contain silent consonants. Start with words you used in your journal entry. Then think of at least three more words with a silent consonant and add them to your journal. Check the spelling of each word in a print or online dictionary. Circle the silent consonants.

Science

Word Hunt

Read the passage below and look for words that contain silent consonants.

So you want to study psychology. The first thing you should do is take classes in science and mathematics. If your high school offers classes in psychology, take those, too. Science courses teach you to think logically and analytically. They also help you understand how the physical world—including the human body—works. You should also study and practice correct grammar, spelling, and punctuation. You will need good communication skills, and those include speaking and writing.

Before you head off to college to begin formal studies, it would probably be an excellent idea for you to interview a working psychologist. Check out your local phone book for names and numbers. When you find a psychologist who is willing and able to give you some time, make sure you are prepared. Have a list of questions ready when you meet. Find out all you can about the day-to-day experience of being a psychologist. Get as much practical knowledge as you can.

If you decide that psychology is for you, you will need to study for several years. Remember that a good psychologist is able to recognize and interpret a person's subtle mannerisms and behaviors. He or she observes how people adjust to stressful situations. A psychologist takes note of a person's qualms and motivations and guides the person to make sense of it all. Learning all these things will take discipline and dedication, but the study of psychology will undoubtedly fascinate anyone interested in the human condition.
